Abundant Merchandise, at Lower Prices, Is Ready to Fill Your Winter Needs—Wanamaker's Down Stairs Store

Boys' Corduroy Knickerbockers Special, $1.50

600 boys will be able to get serviceable, all-around rough-wear knickerbockers that will give much more than a dollar and a half worth of wear! The corduroy is the natural, thick, almost never-wear-out kind. The knickerbockers are well made and every seam is taped. Sizes 7 to 17 years. (Gallery, Market)

Delightfully Feminine

are these women's ostrich-trimmed hats. Reminiscent of the old beloved willow plumes, new hats are showing an abundance of ostrich in its natural, uncurled, fluffy state, knotted for length. There is so much of it that mere crown and brim cannot hold it and it must overflow in the form of long, graceful tassels on one side or another. Never were tassels like them that the wind may blow in bewitching manner over a woman's shoulder and catch on a tress of her hair. Hats like these, in a shade of blue that blue-eyed women know and love, a golden brown and various other colors, are $9.50. Many other new and fascinating hats around $10. (Market)

70 MURDERS HERE SINCE JANUARY 1

Detectives Have Solved All But Four of Crimes, Records Show

SURPASS N. Y. RECORD

Seventy murders have been committed in Philadelphia since the first of this year, a rough average of one every four days.

All but four of these crimes have been solved by the "murder squad" of the detective bureau or by county detectives co-operating with the city police. Six lives were taken in those unsolved crimes.

A comparison with the murder record in New York City reflects no discredit on the Philadelphia police. In New York City out of 120 murders, one half still are unsolved.

Gun is Usual Weapon A survey of the brutal killings here due to rage, avarice, jealousy or other motives shows that by the slayer, the usual weapon used was the revolver.

One of the most atrocious double murders committed in Philadelphia for years and one of the crimes of the year which remains unsolved, was the slaying of Louis Wallenbach and his wife, Fanny Wallenbach, each more than eighty years old, who lived in their little grocery and dwelling at 623 South Randolph street.

The old couple were beaten to death apparently with an iron poker and milk bottles by an intruder or intruders who escaped before the detective was discovered. The county detective working on the case have failed to find the murderer.

Another Double Slaying Another mysterious crime also blotted out two lives, those of John Brancu and his twelve-year-old son. Peter Brancu was beaten to death in their home, 625 North American street.

The son was unconscious when he and his father were found, September 15, crushed and bleeding from vicious blows dealt with some heavy implement. The boy died several hours later in the Roosevelt Hospital.

Still another crime baffling the murder squad is the killing of Martin Redekind, living at 2313 East Dauphin street, who was beaten to death with a crowbar in a Frankford mill April 23. The murderer left no clue.

The fourth unsolved crime has something of the flavor of London's Limehouse district, with its whisperings of Chinese intrigue and the occasional biting out of tongues.

Lee Song Fong, a laundryman, was found shot to death in his laundry at 280 South Third street. He apparently was shot from behind, as he leaned over his ironing board.

Robbery was eliminated as the motive of the crime, as the cash drawer contents had not been touched. Detectives are inclined to believe the killing was ordered by the chiefs of some sinister tong. The motive for this murder may have developed in the narrow, crowded streets of Canton or in the rice fields beyond that Chinese city.

Drowns Case Still Mystery There is another unsolved murder on the recent police records here, although it does not belong on the red roll for 1921. It was the murder of Elmer C. Drowns, a twenty-three-year-old Dartmouth College student. His body was found October 17 on Mascher street between City line and Green lane. Another college youth was tried for the murder and was acquitted.
